A Bicycle and Pedestrian-Friendly Environment

Silicon Valley residents frequently enjoy an active outdoor lifestyle in one of the most beautiful areas of California. This is one of the reasons more people in the area are opting to enjoy their exercise, shopping, socializing and commuting outdoors, either by bike or on foot. As bicycle infrastructure improves, so does ridership. Since 2000 alone, there has been a 60% increase in the number of people who commute daily by bike. The increase in ridership on national Bike to Work day also points to a shifting trend in how people are choosing to travel around local communities.

Related Santa Clara is intentionally situated in a location well-served by a network of existing bicycle and pedestrian paths to incorporate this active lifestyle into the DNA of the development. New bike and pedestrian networks will be added, existing paths will be upgraded, and connections will be provided between the existing and new systems to strengthen the entire regional bicycle network.

People are even more likely to walk and bike when these activities are supported by easy connectivity to useful destinations and links to other transit options. Related Santa Clara will offer a full complement of shopping and recreational opportunities, all connected to regional rail, light rail, municipal bus, shuttle bus and other transit options.
